"Cellar Masters did a great job helping me design our wine room. We had limited space to work with, but I was still able to build a walk-in room that holds 500 bottles!

Love the "label view" storage for the back wall."

Cooling

At Cellar Masters, we recognize that wines need to be stored in ideal climate-controlled conditions to mature gracefully and be protected from spoilage.

Temperature and humidity are both essential elements within wine cellars. The ideal temperature for storing wine for proper aging is between 55 and 60 degrees. While heat can damage wine, giving it an astringent or overly acidic characteristic, the threshold for temperature damage begins at about 70 degrees. Occasional spikes won't hurt your collection, but prolonged exposure, such as a week-long heatwave, can.

Wines should be stored in a room with humidity levels ranging from 50% to 70%. When the humidity exceeds the normal range, mold can begin to grow on wine racks, wine labels, walls, and ceilings. The worst is when molds grow on the cork and contaminate the wine.

When the humidity is lower than the normal range, you run the risk that the cork may shrink and become brittle. When it loses its elasticity, it will allow an unwanted amount of oxygen to enter the bottle and mix with the wine. When this happens, the wine will be oxidized, causing off-flavors and aromas. Moreover, the wine's aging process will accelerate. To help ensure the quality of your wine, Cellar Masters also offers annual service contracts to maintain the optimal operation of your cooling system after installation. We support three different options to fit the needs of your wine cellar best:

- Self-contained system
- Split system
- Ducted system
